BIO-14690, BIO-14670 / Master, elective
6 weeks full time lecture with colloquium & internship, in person, co-teaching with Prof. Epp
winter term
I co-designed this course, prepared and taught half of the lectures and exercises (covering evolutionary biology, genomics, noninvasive/historical/ancient DNA, sequencing technologies & strategies, bioinformatic skills and academic practice), and planned and supervised one independent research project, in which students learn and conduct the complete scientific workflow from literature search, hypothesis development and laboratory work to analysis, interpretation of results and oral and written presentation.

- 2019 – 2021 Seminar Animal Sociality I-IV / responsible & performing BIO-14800, BIO-14810, BIO-15140, BIO-15070 / Bachelor & Master; elective weekly seminar, half term, in person (2019, co-teaching with Dr. A. Maldonado Chaparro)/digital asynchronous (2020)/digital synchronous(2021)
summer & winter term
I initiated, designed, prepared and taught this seminar, which introduces students to cutting edge original research on animal societies, trains them to discuss current results and hypotheses with leading experts, and facilitates interaction between students and scientists. I invited a wide range of internationally recognized scientists to present their work, covering different topics in the field of animal behavior. I compiled the material for students to prepare for the topics and guided them in preparatory meetings to consolidate their knowledge and the topic's main concepts and develop questions. Students actively participated in the discussion after the talk and delivered a report in which they outlined and reflected their contribution to the discussion. There was a joint lunch to allow accessible interactions between students and researchers. The invited talks were open to everybody interested and thus provided a platform to discuss current research in Animal Behaviour across different career stages and disciplines. From 2020, I redesigned the course to digital format with both synchronous and asynchronous components, and integrated international online seminar series instead of invited speakers.
- 2019 – 2023 Lecture Evolutionary Organismal Biology - section Sociality & Evolution / performing
BIO-11290 / Master; elective
1 lecture/term in lecture series, in person (2019, 2023)/digital asynchronous (2020-22)
summer term

2017 – 2019 Molecular Ecology Computer Lab / responsible & performing BIO-14170 / Master; elective
 2 weeks full time lecture and practical, in person, co-teaching with Dr. Kraus
 winter term
I co-designed this course, prepared and taught half of the lectures and exercises (covering evolutionary biology, population genetics, population genetic software tools) and planned and supervised one data project. The objective of this two-week intensive course was to understand the history, reasoning, and benefits behind using molecular tools in (behavioural) ecology, learn applications and transfer this knowledge to selected case studies. There was a strong emphasis on performing analyses on real datasets, so that students learned principles of data handling, became familiar with the available software tools and acquainted themselves with novel tools without prior knowledge.
